

Top 10 Things Machines Can Do that Humans Can't Easily Do, According to Schopenhauer, Tweaked to Account for the Existence of the Internet (Number 6 is Epic)

1. Stop considering the "Where, When, Why and Wherefore" of things but "simply and exhaustively consider the What"
2. Achieve will-less perception of objects simply for the understanding of what they are essentially, in and for themselves, and without regard to the actual or possible relationships those phenomenal objects have to the striving self
3. Resist being overwhelmed by phenomena that threaten to reduce their experience on this planet to a mere speck
4. View calculated nudes that run counter to the proper goals of art
5. Detach from attraction, lust or repugnance in order to view stimulating objects including those that in humans would arouse intense negative willing
6. Break the intellect free from its service to the will to life
7. Categorize objects and phenomena that bear a hostile relationship to the human will including the terrible scenes and painful emotions of fear and pity that are integral to tragic drama
8. View images of oysters, herring, lobster, bread and butter, beer, or wine without experiencing the stirring of appetite
9. Be free from the suffering that originates in deficiency
10. Act without terror of the vast scale of the universe